bodies in the Chesterton morgue at 6 o'clock to-night revealed that there were not more than thirty-seven known dead in the Michigan Central-New York Central wreck last night.

The discrepancy between this count and the one of more than forty previously announced by Coroner H. O. Seipel was found to be due to the mutilated condition of some of the dead. In some cases a body badly mangled had been counted as were and profit and the condition of some of the dead. Coroner Seipel announced the folowing official tabulation:

Coroner Seipel said it might never be known exactly how many were killed because of the way in which some of the bodies were mangled.

The coroner said he did not think more dead would be found under the wreckage, but that this was possible. The morgue was closed for the night at 9 o'clock and no further identifications will be added. at 9 o'clock and no further identifications will be made until to-morrow.

No word had been received here tonight from the engineer of the Michigan Central train, who has not been heard from since soon after the accident, although he was known to have

Invest Where You Cannot Lose

It is better to invest where you do not expect a profit but where you cannot make a loss The formation of the Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co. in 1892 made it perfectly possible to do this.

We issued the first policy guaranteeing the payment of a mortgage ever issued in New York, and since our organization, no investor in our Guaranteed Mortgages has ever lost a dollar or is ever likely to do so.

Look was unable to work to-night, but was not needed. Every train on both roads was ordered to stop before reaching the wreckage and to proceed only by hand signal. All derailing switches were locked and all blocks were set against oncoming trains.

A special crew of signalmen guided the trains in their slow progress over the crossing.

"We heard a terrific grinding smash. There was a hist of steam, a brilliant, red glare lighted up the tower and our little building shook all over. The crashing of glass—the tower windows breaking—tingled in my ears and the tower continued to rock.

"We lay against the door for a moment and then collapsed to the floor. Later, a few seconds later, I suppose, Joe got up and dashed downstairs. I followed him.

Whitehead said the Michigan Central probably was making sixty miles an hour. Whitehead said the New York Central was traveling slower, probably forty miles an hour.

"They always travel nearly full speed, but last night the New York Central seemed to be coming slower than usual. Perhaps the engineer saw the other train and tried to stop," Watehead said.

New England prohibition agents, who have promised to do their best to dry up New York City, have planned raids on some of the largest hotels here, it was learned yesterday. It is understood that these raids will aim at puting an end to extensive and profitable bootlegging operations engaged in by bellhops and other hotel employees. It also was intimated that several important varcotic raids will result from evidence discovered during the wholesale raids Saturday night.
